Welcome to the University of Toronto Faculty of Law Graduate Program!

With more than 60 full-time faculty members and a host of distinguished visiting professors, the graduate program at the U of T Faculty of Law is able to draw on a rich array of intellectual resources. U of T law professors enjoy an international reputation for research and teaching excellence in areas ranging across aboriginal law, health law and policy, Islamic law, law and development, law and economics, law and philosophy, law and technology, public law and human rights.

Our graduate program offers an unparalleled learning environment. We have a truly committed faculty, who are not only excited to advance the educational mission of the law school, but also to incorporate their scholarship into their teaching. And learning goes beyond the classroom, as students will find a vibrant intellectual environment in numerous workshops, conferences and lectures, often bringing renowned scholars from all over the world to interact with faculty and students.

Each year we seek to admit an outstanding group of applicants to join this remarkably diverse and collegial community. Our graduate students come from across Canada, as well as from Africa, Asia, Europe, the Middle East, South America, and the South Pacific, and from a wide variety of backgrounds, age, experiences, and aspirations.

The relatively small size of our Graduate Program (approximately 60 LLMs and 10 SJDs), affords unique opportunities for the exchange of ideas among students, and between students and faculty. It also helps to foster a sense of community among the students, faculty and staff. Our school is institutionally committed to intellectual openness, collegiality, and reason, and students are constantly challenged by new ideas and experiences.

Whether you are interested in advocating for international human rights, promoting development in Latin America, working at a major law firm in New York City, or becoming a law professor in Canada, you should come to U of T Law. Our graduate degrees will provide you with the background and skills necessary to excel in whichever exciting careers you chose to pursue.

I look forward to welcoming you to our community.

DAVID DYZENHAUS
My experience as Associate Dean of the Graduate Program at U of T was enriched immeasurably by the quality of graduate students who come to our school to study each year. The mixture of excellent students from Canada and abroad, united by the desire to do work at the graduate level but with such diverse accomplishments, interests and backgrounds, makes for a tremendously stimulating academic environment.

JUTTA BRUNNEE
I truly enjoyed my time as Associate Dean of the Graduate Program. It is a role through which one gets to know and mentor an incredibly talented group of people. Our graduate students come from around the world and their experiences and perspectives help make our program so vibrant. It is tremendously rewarding to see our LL.M. students go on to exciting new opportunities in Canada and across the globe, and our doctoral students become fellow law teachers and scholars.

BUSINESS LAW CONCENTRATION
PROFESSOR ANITA ANAND
Our Faculty are global leaders and experts in the many components of business law, including securities, corporations, secured transactions, corporate tax and competition law, to name a few. Our expertise and commitment to students ensure that LL.M students who come here for the Business Law Concentration receive a top-notch legal education that is embedded in both the academic discipline and the policy implications of our research.
HEALTH LAW CONCENTRATION
PROFESSOR TRUDO LEMMENS

There has been an explosion of interest in the study of the interconnections between law and health, and our university is a perfect place for interdisciplinary studies in this area, with some of the world’s leading health research institutes, strong programs in global health and global relations, a vibrant Joint Centre for Bioethics, and good connections with health care decision makers. Those interested in the intersection of health, human rights, and bioethics will find particular strengths in this area at our university.

CRIMINAL LAW CONCENTRATION
PROFESSOR MARTHA SHAFFER

The Criminal Law LLM allows students to work with faculty with a wide range of interests and expertise, including antiterrorism legislation, criminal law theory, theories of punishment, criminal procedure, criminal evidence, feminist approaches to criminal law and violence against women. Prominent defence and Crown counsel serve as adjunct faculty and provide students with a knowledge of criminal law practice that complements the academic strength of our full time faculty.

LEGAL THEORY CONCENTRATION
PROFESSOR ERNEST WEINRIB

Theoretical reflection about law involves the fusion of theory and practice. This is the approach that guides the work of the large community of legal theorists at the Faculty of Law. Their writings have established the University of Toronto as one of the world’s great centers for legal philosophy. Students interested in legal theory will find themselves studying with legal theorists who are internationally regarded as leaders in their fields and who work at the cutting edge of interdisciplinary scholarship in law and philosophy.
BUILD YOUR LEGACY

As a graduate student of the SJD program, and former Dean of the Faculty, I can tell you that the U of T Faculty of Law offers an interesting and broad range of courses, which are enriched by workshops, colloquia and intensive courses taught by distinguished visiting professors. This creates an exciting intellectual atmosphere with first-class international scholars.

APPLY TO THE GRADUATE PROGRAM

The Faculty of Law offers three graduate degrees: the Master of Laws (LLM); the Master of Studies in Law (MSL); and the Doctor of Juridical Science (SJD). Through these degrees, we aim at training the next generation of leaders in academia, private practice, government, and non-profit and non-governmental organizations worldwide.
THE MASTER OF LAWS (LLM) PROGRAM

The Master of Laws (LLM) is a one-year graduate law degree for students interested in continuing their study of the law beyond their first law degree. It provides an opportunity to explore legal issues in greater depth and breadth in a rewarding academic environment.

The full-time LLM is designed as a 12 month program commencing in September. When applying to the LLM program, you can choose between two different streams:

The Thesis Intensive LLM: a strong emphasis on a thesis (short or long) with less coursework; or
The Coursework Intensive LLM: an emphasis on coursework

THE MASTERS OF STUDIES IN LAW (MSL) PROGRAM

The Master of Studies in Law is a very small program designed for established academics and scholars who work and write in a discipline related to law, and who wish to acquire a knowledge of law in order to add a legal dimension to scholarship in their own discipline.

Applicants should hold a doctorate from a recognized university, and should have demonstrated a high level of scholarship in a discipline related to law. Applicants often undertake this degree while on leave from their academic appointments.

THE DOCTOR OF JURIDICAL SCIENCE (SJD) PROGRAM

The doctoral program at the U of T Faculty of Law provides an opportunity for outstanding law graduates to pursue original academic research at the highest level. It is becoming increasingly common for Canadian and international law schools to hire doctoral graduates as law faculty. Research on the education of Canada’s law professors reveals that the University of Toronto’s graduate school is the leading institution from which Canadian law professors earned their highest graduate degree.

GENERAL ADMISSION REQUIREMENTS

To be admitted to any of our programs, we require a minimum B+ average on the final one year of a previous Law degree (or masters/doctoral degree for the MSL program).
